The South Korean Order

By Paul Patrick, OMS Member and Owner, Gem Trees by Patrick

In mid-August of this year I received an e-mail inquiry from a commercial real estate firm headquartered in New Jersey asking me if a custom made gem tree could be completed by the end of September, 2003. I replied positively, with certain reservations, namely the type of tree, the types of gemstones requested along with other special requests.

Paul Patrick's workbench at the start

Kristen, the coordinator assigned by her company to find a unique corporate gift for one of their overseas clients, found my website and indicated to me that her boss (the company CEO) wanted to see a sample of my work before committing to an order. I mentioned to her that they could buy a finished Oak Gem Tree made of fine Canadian Jade, inspect it, and either keep it or mail it back to me. Kristin e-mailed me stating that they received the tree and decided that they would like to place an order, but needed more time to decide the details like the type of tree, the selected gemstones.

I decided to phone her to personally discuss their requests. She mentioned that they wanted a gem tree done in traditional Korean style, meaning that a gem tree looking like a Japanese pine would not suffice, but would actually be insulting to their culture. She suggested a Korean White Pine. I said that I would get on the internet to locate a picture of a Korean White Pine and get back to her regarding feasibility and price.

Two days of internet searching did not produce a picture, but lots of scientific data on the tree. Finally Kristin e-mailed me a picture (gleaned from a Korean travel brochure) of what this tree should look like. To my surprise, the tree looked like the big "Digger Pine" growing just outside my door. I replied back that there should be no problem meeting her deadline of September 30th. She then dropped a bomb on me, saying that they decided on FIVE gem trees, all the same, with four of them finished within five weeks. The fifth one could be completed at a later date as it was going into the corporate headquarters. Also, they wanted the gem trees done in Canadian Jade and Alaskan Gold, with a unique, "one of a kind" base and elegant presentation boxes bringing the cost of each gem tree to over twice the initial cost.

I accepted the commission and proceeded to source out both the presentation boxes and the bases. Fortunately, my neighbor, Marvin Kroger, a master woodworking craftsman started work on the elegant presentation boxes and Wes Lingerfelt accepted the job of fabricating the bases out of fine, rare petrified wood from the petrified wood forest in Arizona. That left me with acquiring the suitable Alaskan gold nuggets by the bidding process on eBay. These gold nuggets had to be the right size and weight because when applied to the gem tree the final effect had to look like the jade tree was “wind dusted” in gold.

Korean White Pine in progress

Early in my negotiations with Kristin I mentioned that I would need payment in full prior to constructing custom made gem trees. She promptly mailed me (by overnight express) a check for the total amount so I could proceed with the project. As a side comment, she mentioned that the Gem Trees were to be presented as gifts to four important clients residing in South Korea. They were: the President of South Korea, his deputy, the mayor of Seoul and his deputy. I was stunned! I have made other custom gem trees for corporate clients but never for such important foreign dignitaries.

Since both Marvin and Wes lived relatively close I could easily check on their progress. Winning and delivering gold nuggets from eBay sellers caused me much grief due to the timing. Finally to solve that problem I contacted each gold seller requesting they use Priority Mail for faster delivery.

Finally, after 35 continuous days and late nights without a break (my wife threatened divorce), the project was finished and shipped to New Jersey, one full day before the deadline.

The finished product, the “Korean White Pine” in Canadian jade and Alaskan gold with Arizona petrified wood base

Kristin contacted me with profound thanks stating that the final results were far beyond their expectations, and that all the corporate staff marveled as to the resemblance of the trees to the one and only picture I had to work with. To this end, I extend my many thanks to Wes, Marvin, and all the eBay gold sellers for cooperating with me on this project with such a tight deadline.

On a CLEAR (Creek) Day...

By The Wanderer

(another fun joint field trip with Santa Lucia Rockhounds)

Dreaming of treasures to be found, our journey to Clear Creek Management Area began at 7 a.m., and would be a long, rewarding day of adventure for Ralph Bishop, Robbie Bullock, Sharon Duncan, Dee Dee Magri, Dick and Bess Shields. We pressed on to King City, headed east, and met up with the Santa Lucia Rockhounds group in the Clear Creek/Oak Flat Campground by 10:30. The temperature was ideal since Santa Maria was in the 80's, and so was Clear Creek! Our first collecting stop was one mile east of the campground along the creek. Sharon and Ralph hoofed it upstream far ahead of the group. The rest of us collected close to the road, finding botroidal jade, orbicular pieces of jasper, chatoyant material, serpentine, cinnabar, and turtle jade.

Road R001 over the saddle between Idria Peak and San Benito Mountain leads to the Aurora Mine

The BLM map states, "Hobby gem and mineral collectors are drawn to the Clear Creek area by the presence of over 150 semi-precious minerals and gemstones." There are numerous exploratory digs toward the crest of the canyon to the north, and benitoite mine dig evidence on the far side of the hill. Other minerals found in the management area include asbestos, topazite, tremolite, chromium, mercury, chert, and neptunite.

Dee Dee, and Robbie stayed close to his new truck awaiting the return of Sharon and Ralph. Dick and I had adopted a new Santa Lucia member. Susan was delightful company, and enjoyed her first field trip immensely. We three decided to set off for the mines uphill, past staging area 6 on R001, uphill to T130, and R014. The BLM map is accurate and quite helpful. The management area is a popular dirt biking destination, and the many riders we encountered all wore asbestos protection masks since this is a natural hazardous asbestos area.

Although Dick and Robbie had coordinated their walkie talkie stations at the campground, they were unable to locate one another all afternoon. Steep terrain and long distance prevented any contact. After touring the largest mine, we rejoined R001, and continued downhill seeking the others.

We finally encountered them just another mile east of their all-day collecting spot.

We ended the adventure by collecting turtle jade just to the south of Oak Flat Campground along the streambed. I was designated as the go-pher (go fer that one in the middle of the stream, please, since you're already barefoot). Sharon has plenty of material for wire-wrapping, Dee Dee found jade for hubby (Aldo), and Robbie filled up the back end of his new truck with plenty of boulders the girls just had to take home. Dick even retrieved some fluorescent materials from the side of the road. BLM was right by designating this area as a gem and mineral collector's paradise!

Sharon concluded tarantulas don't like hand lotion when this one jumped (and so did we)!

On the way out of the Clear Creek area, we saw wild turkey, elk, and evidence of wild pigs. Sharon even tried to make friends with a fuzzy little tarantula. We ended our day of adventure by having dinner at the Wild Horse Café and Truck Stop. It was a LONG day, but I look forward to doing it again soon.

If you do go up to Clear Creek, make sure you take plenty of drinking water, a variety of snacks and sandwiches, lots of rock buckets, sandals for creek collecting, a rock hammer, and sunscreen. There are pit toilets at each of the 6 staging areas. It is not recommended that you drive up the hill if the weather has been wet! We made it easily in the Sequoia on a dry day, but would be in trouble if it were wet.

This was another successful jaunt. Care to join us next time?

Happy hunting, love, Bess

Wes Lingerfelt Debuts His Drag Saw

After years of trying to get my act together I finally made it. I now have a working drag (rock) saw capable of cutting big logs. The first one to get cut was acquired in 1991 over the 4th of July holiday and consisted of borrowing a trailer from Al Ryzner and driving 1810 miles round trip to Farmington, New Mexico in 3 days. I am pleased to note that the log was well worth the trip and the long wait to get it cut. Here are some pictures:

This slab of petrified pecan wood is 20" X 17"

When it's polished, the pecan takes on a rich dark brown color. This sphere is 7" but Wes has a 10" in the grinder as we go to press

BEACHIN' Trip

The Wanderer (OMS field trip for October)

Dick Shields surprised us all by starting the collecting trip at the Santa Barbara Museum of Natural History. It was Tom Dibblee's birthday, and a special celebration (at $50 plate) was planned for him by the museum. Being of the rockhounding ilk, we chose to picnic under the trees in our dungarees instead of sipping champagne. Contributors to our feast were Dee Dee Magri, Sharon Duncan, Christine Clason, Robbie Bullock, Ralph Bishop, Dick and Bess Shields.

We spent two hours touring the featured exhibits, including an Earth Day Celebration for kids.

Several special cases of exhibits from the Santa Barbara Rockhounds were filled with great specimens, including marbles that Tom made over the years.

After our museum visit, we traveled north to the railroad trestle collecting spot for agates, jasper, chert, and fossilized materials. This vista point features a very steep descent, but is an excellent collecting location. The only drawback is going back uphill with 40+ pounds per person of wonderful material.

Texture, not color...texture, not color...

Our last stop was easier to traverse, at a little spot one mile south of the trestle. We wandered long, sandy beaches, and inspected piles of materials washed ashore last spring. We found plenty of large chunks: Catalina marble, calcite globs, jaspers, some fossilized material, and pretty agates.

We ended the day back at Shields' home for enchilada casserole, homemade cookies, and ice cream. We all considered this a very successful day of hunting! Care to come along next time?

Happy Hunting! Love, Bess
